Statesmen Welcome Oil, Gold Accords

Ford-Giscard Agreements Hailed

BRUSSELS, Dec. 17 (Reuters). ropean Economic Community officials today welcomed the agreements on oil and gold reached by Presidents Ford and Valéry Giscard d'Estaing at their summit meeting in Martinique.

The decision to start preparing a world energy conference of oilconsuming and oil-producing nations came as no surprise here.
At the NATO ministerial session in Brussels last week, French Foreign Minister Jean Sauvagnargues said after talks with Secretary of State Henry Kissinger that the only real problem was one of The officials also said the narrowing of the gap between American and Common Market thinking on gold. In Tokyo, official Japanese sources welcomed the summit decision to prepare an energy conference. They said the outcome of the Martinique meeting would seem to indicate that France had agreed to support Mr. Kissinger's plan for solving the oil payments crisis. The sources added that French participation would reduce the possibility of confrontation between oil-producing and oil-consuming countries, a good development for Japan, which depends heavily on Middle East oil. British Pleased

In London, British officials hailed the agreement by the two Presidents to work toward holding a preparatory meeting be-tween producers and consumers by March next year.

The officials said the British government had regretted that France had not taken part in the work of the U.S.-proposed International Energy Agency, which includes major Western oll-consuming nations and Japan. In Bonn the West German Foreign Ministry warmly welcomed the energy agreement and said it was particularly pleased that previous differences of view were being bridged largely along the lines of West Germany's policies. The summit "underlined again that a solution to the world energy crisis is possible only on the basis of cooperation and not confrontation," the Foreign Ministry added.

French newspapers said today that a new era in Franco-American relations has begun follow-ing the Martinique meeting. "A page has been turned," said the conservative and generally pro-American daily L'Aurore. It said the French and American Presidents "have eliminated the morosity, the gratings, the misunderstandings which for too long had soured Franco-American

France, which sought the agreement on the gold question, is expected to put the accordinto effect shortly. However, official spokesmen in London and Frankfurt said their governments were unlikely to revalue their gold holdings. West Germany, with the second-largest hoard after the United States, is still running trade surpluses and has no need to increase the value of its gold. Congress to Set Feb. 5 Deadline

By Spencer Rich

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17 (WP). -House-Senate conferees agreed today to delay a total congressional cutoff of weapons aid to Turkey until Feb. 5, to give Secretary of State Henry Kissinger more time to negotiate peace in

The postponement was endorsed by the conferees after Mr. Kissinger met with House leaders and foes of Turkey aid last night to plead for more negotiating time. The Feb. 5 cutoff date was then written into the final version of a $2.69-billion foreign-aid authorization bill that won final conference approval today.

The Senate then passed the bill, 49-41. House approval was considered certain.

The sponsors of the cutoff. Sen. Thomas Engleton, D-Mo., and Reps. John Brademas, D-Ind., Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., and Ben-jamin Rosenthal, D-N.Y., said after the conference that while they favor an immediate end of aid to Turkey, as passed by the House, they had agreed not to oppose postponement until Feb. 5 in view of the prospect that negotiations for a Cyprus settlement "will commence shortly."

They also stressed that inclusion of the Feb. 5 date in a bill that will become permanent law makes the cutoff absolute and irremediable, unless Turkey agrees to start withdrawing its invasion forces from their partial occupation of Cyprus. A previous cutoff voted by Congress for Dec. 10 had been attached to temporary legislation.

Rep. Brademas repeatedly refused to say whether Mr. Kis-singer had informed them of any definite plans to open talks on removal of Turkish troops, but Rep.-Rosenthal asserted that the hope for talks soon "is a realistic hope based on representations declined to elaborate. The Turkey aid cut-off, initia!-Iv attached to a temporary aid money bill, is justified by its backers with the argument that Tur-key has used U.S.-aid weapons for aggression in Cyprus, contrary to foreign-aid laws and agreements.

Its sponsors argued that continuing U.S. weapon supplies for Turkey would only make that nation more able to entrench itself in Cyprus, to refuse to negotiate withdrawal, and to move toward permanent, unilateral partition of the island. Kissinger's View

Mr. Kissinger, however, said a cutoff would anger the Turks and disrupt future peace talks. In a compromise two months ago, the cutoff was postponed until Dec. 10, at which time it went into effect, and Mr. Kis-singer asked for another postponement. The House, in its version of the permanent aid authorization bill, refused, but the Senate adopted a bill introduced by Hubert Humphrey, D-Minn, granting a postponement until Feb. 13, which conferees today moved up to Feb. 5.

The final aid bill, as cleared by the conference committee today, carries $325 million in economic aid for Israel and $300 million in military aid for Israel. (Continued on Page 2, Col. 7)

U.S. Court Voids 20-Year Sentence For Russian Spy NEWARK, N.J., Dec. 17 (UPI).

The 20-year prison sentence of —The EU-year prison sentence of Soviet spy Igor Ivanov was dis-missed yesterday at the request of the State Department, which said that bringing him back from Russia might strain foreign relations relations.

U.S. District Court Judge Lawrence Whipple vacated the sentence of Ivanov. 44, who was convicted with an American en-gineer working on Strategic Atr Command projects in 1964 of conspiring to transmit military secrets to Russia.

The poll also reported that for the first time more British con-sider the Common Market a "good thing" than a "bad thing." But most other Europeans, asked how serious a British withdrawal from the Common Market would be, indicated indifference.

The poll, taken in October and November by professional polling organizations in each of the nine REC countries, listed 12 social problems and asked 9,000 persons to rate them. Inflation was rated as "very important" by 71 per cent, well ahead of pollution, with per cent, and energy and

Doubt Raised in U.S. on Offer Of A-Plants to Israel, Egypt

By John W. Finney

-Reservations expressed by Israel are raising serious doubts in administration circles here that the United States will be able to carry through with its offer to provide Egypt and Israel with large atomic power plants. Israel has communicated to the United States its disinterest m receiving an atomic power plant from the United States at this time, State Department officials The Israeli position was presented by Foreign Minister Yigal Allon during his discussions here last week with Secretary.

of State Henry Kissinger. Mr. Allon's official Israeli explansition was that Israel was not prepared to make the relatively large commitment involved in building the atomic power plant.
But on the basis of earlier discussions, State Department officials suspect that the underlying reason w an Israeli reservation about placing all of its atomic facilities including the Dimona reactor that is capable of producing plutonium for weap--under international inspec-

Stringent Controls In addition to demanding stringent American safeguards, the United States had proposed that each nation agree to allow inspection of the nuclear power plants and all future atomic facilities by the International Atomic Energy Agency.

The Egyptian position was that since Egypt had no reactors capable of producing enough plutonium for weapons, it would be discriminatory to place all its future plants under international inspection while Israel retained an uninspected reactor able to make enough plutonium for a few atomic weapons a year.

As anticipated by State Department officials, the Egyptian counter-offer was in effect rejected by Israel, which took the position that it was not immediately interested in obtaining an atomic power reactor from the United States.

Israel was said to have made clear that it would raise no objections to the sale of an American atomic power plant to Egypt. With Israel out of the arrangement, however, Department officials are uncertain that Egypt would still want a reactor from the United States or that such a sale would be approved by Congress.

Some administration officials suspect that Israel's motive in withdrawing its interest was in effect to veto the sale of an American reactor to Egypt. Since the offer was made by former President Richard Nixon last June, the proposed sale of reactors to the two Middle East nations, and in particular to Egypt, has run into unexpectedly intense congressional criticism. The criticism could be expected to increase if the transaction was not a parallel arrangement between the two nations but a sale only to Egypt.

150 places where scotch drinkers can order Jack Daniel's.

Scotch drinkers are a tenacious breed. But when they try Jack Daniel's for a change, many are surprised at the gentle flavor they find. Every drop of our whiskey is seeped through 12 feet of charcoal, a process that makes it the unique, favorite sipping-whiskey of America.

Unfortunately, this slow process occasionally makes Jack Daniel's hard to find in some areas. The restaurants, bars and hotels listed below, however, are a few of the places where it is in plentiful supply. At these establishments, scotch drinkers may find that they agree with drinkers of American whiskey on the smoothness of Jack Daniel's.

Harvard Forger Denies Falsifying Research Data

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Dec. 17 (NYT).—Steven Rosenfeld, a se-nior who was forced to withdraw from Harvard College last week for fabricating letters of recom-mendation, has issued a statement denying that he also falsified results in a major biochemistry research project in which he was participating at the school.

Over the weekend, a team of Harvard biochemists led by Dr. David Dressler disclosed that after learning of the student's forgeries, they were preparing to withdraw the published results of the experiments, which had to do with the existence of an elusive "transfer factor" believed to transmit immune responses from one animal to another. Since April, the laboratory has been unable to reproduce the results it had initially achieved.

In his written statement yesterday, Mr. Rosenfeld, a straight-A student admitted the letter forgeries. The letters were recommendations for medical school. for Phi Beta Kappa and for a scholarship.

Ex-GI Reports Pot Use at Missile Base

An Army code and cipher specialist, now off active duty, says that he and others at a nuclear missile base in West Germany smoked hashish frequently and were sometimes under its influence when they worked with nuclear weapons.

Donald Meyer, 25, said that he was honorably discharged with the rank of corporal on Dec. 15, 1973, and is still in the Army

In an interview with the Milwankee Journal, he estimated that 95 per cent of the 225 mis-silemen of the 74th Artillery Detachment used hashish in the 29 months he was there,

Mr. Meyer, now a college student, said that he and others could still do their jobs while they were under the influence of hashish, a close relative of marihiana.

Rain a Good Thing

"You get to know what you can handle," he told the newspaper, "Too much hash and you would ruin a good thing."

Mr. Meyer said that he smoked hashish two or three times every four hours almost every day. He said that he was under the influence of the drug sometimes when he worked with secret material. He also said that soldiers of his detachment sometimes were high when they worked with nuclear weapons.

The detachment was stationed in Gunzburg, about 125 miles from the Czechoslovak border. Mr. Meyer said that he chose to talk in order to demonstrate that a serious problem existed in his unit. "If the Army would increase morale of its troops, they prob-

The survey was based on interviews with a small sample of the 185,000 Army men then stationed in West Germany.

Anti-Busing Clause Dropped From School Aid Bill in U.S.

By Richard L. Lyons

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7 (NYT). can be carried by non-Ameri-Congress finally resolved vesterday its four-month battle over school desegregation when the House followed the Senate's lead and nullified an anti-busing amendment in an education money bill sending the measure to President Ford.

The anti-busing clause-which did not specifically mention busing-had been put into the $8.6-billion appropriations bill by 1.13 House two months ago, but was deleted Saturday by the Senate after a filibuster was narrowly defeated. Introduced by Rep. Marjorie Holt. R-Md., the amendment was viewed by its opponents as a means of subverting the terms of the 1984 Civil Rights Act, which gave the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) the authoriy to enforce school desegregation.

HEW's Power

HEW has chosen to exercise this power by cutting off federal school funds, such as those contained in yesterday's bi'l, from those districts that it held to be not complying with the terms of the act. The Holt amendment would have barred the department from demanding that schools receiving such funds classify students and teachers on the basis of race.

Officials of the department said the effect of the amendment would have been to block action by the department to withhold funds, and that the department thus could not have enforced the civil rights laws banning discrimination.

The Senate gave final approval yesterday to a bill that would require 30 per cent of all U.S. oil imports to be transported in American-built and operated tankers by 1977. The vote, sending the legislation to the White House, was 44 to 40.

Psychiatrists Praised Prisoner

Life Sentence Given Leftist Is a Cause Célèbre in France

By Jonathan C. Randal

Above and beyond admiring such intellectual prowess, which is always esteemed in France, left, right and center have rallied be-hind Goldman because of the praise heaped on him by psychia-trists and the director of Presnes Prison, who noted the defendant's help in putting down a jail riot last summer.

Limits of Testimony

Typical of the apolitical backing for Goldman was the comment in the right-wing newspa, 'r L'Aurore. The newspaper wonder-ed if the verdict had not marked the limits of psychiatric testimony in criminal cases, for doctors had noted Goldman's progress i m the brink of schizophrenia to his present ability to cope with

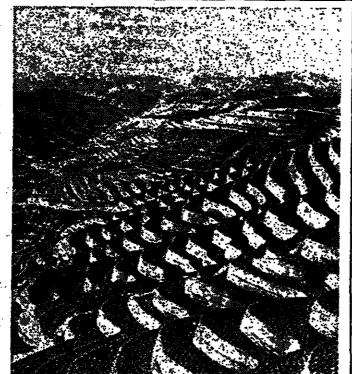

"One must consider henceforth whether (psychiatrists') testimony is listened to only when it helps the prosecution and must be rejected when favoring the defendant," the newspaper sai. The verdict handed down just after midnight Saturday touched off a storm of protest as lawyers and older bystanders joined Goldman's young, leftist friends in hooting at judge and jury.

Shouts of "assassins" and racists were heard as the leftists gave the stiff-armed Nazi salute in derision and fought for nearly a helf-hour with the police, who finally managed to restore order.

Although ~oldman had helped to conduct his own defense-and tried to show that it, prosecution's case was based largely a an informer protected from public confrontation by law-his own bitter remark summed up the verdict better than the judge's formal statement

"The absurdity of this rentence," he said, "is in perfect keeping with my fundamental aptitude to be accused."

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17 (AP). radiation, is changing, whether—Hoping to determine if jet jet vapor trails contribute to cloud planes pollute the upper atmosphere—as ecologists insist—the National Aeronautics and Space Administration is equipping four commercial airliners with sensors to measure pollution.

The five-year program began this week when a United Air Lines Boeing 747 carried the detectors for the first time. It will take readings during normal commercial flights over the continental United States and between the West Coast and Hawaii,

Within months, 747 jets of three other airlines will operate the sensors: Pan American over its international air lanes, Qantas of Australia in the Southern Hemisphere and the Scandinavian Airlines System over the north polar route.

The $5-million project is called GASP, for Global Air Sampling Program. The goal is to determine how jet exhausts and other pollution sources affect the atmosphere at altitudes above

Porter Perkins, GASP project manager, said that the results may show whether the level of the osone, which shields the earth cover and how much of the dust comes from aircraft.

When the planes climb to an altitude of 20,000 feet, the air sampling equipment turns on automatically and does not interfere with regular aircraft operations. A tube protruding six inches beneath the first class cabin takes air for analysis by the instruments aboard the aircraft, The system measures dust particles, carbon monoxide, ozone, water vapor, carbon dioxide and oxides of nitrogen. The Boeing 747's modern navigational gear permits this data to be coordinated with aircraft location, altitude, temperature and speed at the time of measurements, The ozone layer of the upper atmosphere absorbs the greater part of ultraviolet rays from the sun. In mild doses, this radiation causes sunburn; in larger doses, some fear it could cause skin cancer. If the full force were experienced at the earth's surface, it could be fatal to all life.

One of the arguments used in defeating the U.S. supersonic transport program three years ago was that the plane's emissions from harmful ultraviolet solar might somehow damage the ozone. The 43 Soviet Years of a U.S.-Born Farm Expert

Pensioner in Russia With Negro Nationality

By Robert C. Toth MOSCOW, Dec. 17-George Winocski Tynes has to be one of the Soviet Union's more unusual citizens.

He was born in Roanoke, Va., but has lived and worked here for 43 years. More unusual is that he is the son of a black preacher father and Dakota Indian mother. As a Russian official said with some understate-

"It is not very usual to find a black on our collective farms." Mr. Tynes, now 68, prefers the word "Negro," which is the description of his "nationality" on his internal Soviet passport. He came here in 1931, at the age of 25, on a two-year contract as an agriculture specialist and was put to work in the middle-Asian republic of Uzbekistan where he recalled last week. he seemed to fit in.

"Down there, they thought I was a Uzbek," he chuckled. "A little bigger and a little darker than most, but they tried to talk Uzbek to me."

Mixed All Up

"I used to get mixed all up." he laughed again at the recol-lection. "Then, there was Georgian and Ukrainian and lection. Russian," he said in recalling his movements. "I'm still learning Russian, but I speak all right now."

Mr. Tynes has three children by his Ukrainian-Russian wife, and three grandchildren and a pension from the Leninsky Collective Fishery near Moscow, wh: e he was chief of the large duck-breeding operation.
It was not ideology but "just job" that brought him here in 1931, he said, "and maybe some interest in seeing the country I'd read some books about." That time there was the Depression in America, yes?" he continued in a curious mixture of Russian construction and black Southern patois. "Last to find work, first to be fired, that's what American Negroes say." He had graduated that year from Wilberforce University, in Ohio, where he starred in several sports, particularly football. With his degree in vocational agriculture education, he was certified "to teach in colored schools" in Baltimore, according to a certifi-cate he retains. But there was

In the highly polemic article two years ago, Slava also wrote that his father wanted to "make known the truth about the most fust social system in the world the millions of his colored brothers and sisters suffering under the yoke of discrimination and rightlessness."

George Tynes tells it more simply: "I liked the work and the people and the way they treated me. I like the system very much, I feel I've been free, that there are been been. that there are no bars because of color on me or my children." So in 1939 he became a citizen.

Martinique

At their weekend meeting, the Presidents of the United States and France apparently reached a broad and useful measure of agreement on how to try to cope with the huge price increases dictated by the oil cartel a year ago. And in the process, they also seem to have given a new and more constructive cast to Franco-American relations. Only last February at the Washington Energy Conference. American efforts to coordinate Atlantic energy policy had been received by France in a negative spirit of Gauilist resentment. At Martinique, however, the leaders of both countries acted on the realization that Atlantic tension is an indulgence inconsistent with their deep economic needs. There was evident a willingness to find an effective compromise solution of the principal tactical question before them-how to go about preparing consumers for the long and difficult negotiations with the oil producers that are now required.

The upshot was agreement on a preparation procedure combining incorporating (1) the nonprovocative format favored by the French, who rely heavily on imported oil and are fearful of the West's doing anything that the oil producers might take as confrontation, and (2) the measured pace favored by the United States, which hesitates to go into a conference with the oil producers until the consumers have organized themselves as best they can. If the consumers agree to this procedure—and the French believe they will—then the year 1975 will see a series of conferences that may well determine not only whether the nations on either side of the Atlantic continue as a community but whether the industrialized nations as individual states rise or fall.

Considering these stakes, it is no surprise that there has been such difficulty on the Western side figuring out how to respond to the oil price increases. For the United States the problem has been compounded by the evident desire not just to cope with the oil shock but to provide a degree of Western leadership consistent with the requirements of alliance cohesion at a moment of very great disarray. As for the French, even after Martinique they have not entirely abandoned their apprehension that cooperation with the United States means putting too much of their future in American hands. Some Frenchmen profess to fear, for instance, that Washington is less interested in lowering oil prices than it is in becoming independent in energy-behind a shield of high prices-and then dominating an impoverished Europe. But such French apprehensions seem to have been subordinated, for now anyway, to a wider vision of Western cooperation. A case can be made that the preparatory steps which the United States had already taken with other Europeans since the conference last February had left the French little choice but to come aboard now. It surely is better to stress, however, that the French-with the reservations required by the continuing internal political imperatives of Gaullism-are aboard.

Symbolic—and satisfyingly so—of the new Franco-American desire to remove the spectacle and distraction of alliance bickering was the agreement by Mr. Ford and Mr. Giscard d'Estaing on French compensation of $100 million for U.S. military bases closed by France when France departed the integrated military organization of NATO a decade ago and forced the evacuation of American NATO forces deployed in France. This is an issue which could have been resolved at any moment the two countries chose. That they have chosen this particular moment says a great deal about the spirit in which they and perhaps the oil producers will be entering the conference—and addressing their differences—on the infinitely more urgent problem of oil.

Support for Portugal

The United States has finally abandoned its shortsighted wait-and-see policy toward Portugal and launched a modest economic aid program aimed at helping the effort to build "a free and democratic society" in that country after 40 years of dictatorship. This represents a turnaround by Secretary of State Kissinger, who had marked time on the aid issue presumably because the Portuguese Communist party had demonstrated its strength since its return to legality and because its leader is a minister in the present

Washington's alcofness was unquestionably helping to advance the very condition that worried Mr. Kissinger. Many Portuguese were getting the idea that the United States had written off their country as one certain to go Communist. Democratic forces of the center—the New Democrats, the Democratic Social Center, Christian Democrats and some Social Democrats—felt abandoned. The Communists, fortified by strong positions in the unions, universities, press and public service, were exploiting a "wave-of-thefuture" psychology.

Portugal's Communists were well equipped to take maximum advantage of the vacuum left by the collapse of the dictatorship last April. They had maintained an underground organization superior to those of the democratic parties and they could count on lavish aid from the Soviet Union, which they had slavishly supported even on the invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968.

Despite their strong position and the support they get from some quarters in the powerful Armed Forces Movement, however, the Communists and their allies fear free elections and are urging delay of those for a constituent assembly, scheduled for next March. Though the Communists will remain an important force, there was never any reason to write off the strength of the democrats or the possibilities of a lasting democracy in Portugal. It is a relief that Mr. Kissinger has now apparently recognized

Not France in World War I but Vletnam many wars later inspired Senate action that is expected to lead to ratification of the 1925 Geneva protocol outlawing chemical and biological warfare. It is a tribute to Sen. William Fulbright, winding up his distinguished career as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, that a compromise has been worked out so that the United States can at last sign this agree-

In the Vietnam war years, the government had expressed willingness to ratify the ban but with the understanding that defoliants and riot control gases were exempted. This was a stumbling block since the chemical warfare in Vietnam was considered "lethal" and thus in violation of the Geneva protocol. Now the administration is giving assurances to the Senate that, as a matter of national policy, President Ford is prepared to renounce first the use of herbicides and riotcontrol agents except in specified defensive

Searing memories of trench warfare and ways, such as where civilians are used to

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee also unblocked and approved a companion treaty, the biological warfare convention. that would formally renounce germ warfare. This leaves another modern means of warfare-environmental-still to be renounced by treaty. Last summer the United States and the Soviet Union issued a joint statement calling for effective measures to overcome environmental modification - such as the Air Force's "rainmaking" along the Ho Chi Minh Trail-for military purposes. In the larger realm of intercontinental missiles and nuclear arms control, putting the chemical and biological genii back in the bottle may seem insignificant. But these steps against debilitating forms of warfare-which inevitably spill over the theaters of conflict and endanger civilian populations-can serve as a signal of national intent on larger matters of disarmament and a true "cap" on the terrible weaponry of civilized nations.

NEW YORK-Abraham Lincoln popularized the phrase: "Never swap horses while crossing a stream." Now that Lord Roberts has been appointed commander in chief of the British forces in South Airics, and Lord Kitchener his chief of staff, it would seem that England has done precisely that. But for what purpose? Wouldn't it be better for England to end the war now and come to some kind of understanding for an arrangement with the Boers? The whole world would praise such an action on Britain's park

It is not a fascinating show for Perisians who are accustomed to the finest exhibits in the world, yet it has drawn considerable crowds of curiosity seekers and the politically committed. Isn't it time for the United States to prepare and present its own panorama of the long Franco-American alliance?

An odd facet of their twocenturies-old friendship is that the French and Americans have often admired but rarely understood each other. We gave more credit from the start to Lafayette in our national legend than to the commanders of significant French forces aiding Washington
-Rochambeau, De Grasse and d'Estaing. And the most important of the early French Americanophiles, King Louis XVI, is famous in the United States only for losing his head.

Where's 'Hawkeye'?

Benjamin Franklin, precursor of the USIA, solemnly assured a Parisian journalist that all Philadelphia workingmen read "a few good works of philosophy or politics for an hour after din-ner," which made Madame de Staël toy with the idea of moving her famous salon to that city. When Jules Verne and his brother visited New York State after the American Civil War, they imag-ined it peopled with feathered natives and they addressed each other as "Hawkeye" and "Chin-

France was the "arsenal of democracy for the first world conflict when U.S. forces used French aircraft, tion was reversed in the second conflict. No one was then conof a weapon's origin—so long as it worked well.

The two political systems have never really been quite the same. Nevertheless, Lafayette sent the key of the Bastille to George Washington in 1790 and it now hangs in Mount Vernon, With it, the French marquis gave his personal courier, Tom Paine, a letter for Washington, which "The key is the symbol of the first ripe fruits of American principles translated into Europe . . That the principles of America opened the Bastille is not to be doubted, and therefore the key comes to its right place."

New York's Statue of Liberty is, of course, a French contribution-just as the refurbishment of Versailles has been an American contribution. Both partners have helped each other at many moments but they aren't graceful about recalling this fact,

Few foreign writers have had an influence here comparable to Poe's. Hemingway, Fitzgerald, Pound and Gertrude Stein established a glowing tradition of literary Americans in Paris However, secretaries of state-Acheson, Dulles, Rusk and Kissinger -have, each in his way, maninstance. If one begins to think seriously about possibilities, the list is endless and the opportunity represented is immense. Why should not some benevolently-inclined Frenchmen and Americans start for the purpose of underscoring a new phase in relationships but to remind the citizens of both nations that, regardless of temporary, sour moments, this is an old friendship with great survival capacity.

Some Notes on Trade

· Secretary of State Henry Kissinger has suggested that President Ford trade his press secretary, Ronald Nessen, for Nicole Seguin, a young woman who works in the press office of President Giscard d'Estains of Prance. This is the best idea. Kissinger has had since peace was at hand. Let's trade Nessen and Ford, even up, for Mila Seguin and Giscard d'Estaing; as a fallback position we could even throw in a low draft choice from

This trade would not straighten out either country, as that is not possible. The Bank Experts

Are the bank authorities of the Western world truly as incompetent or unprincipled as they appear to be? For how much nger must the "little guy" and the currency system as a whole suffer from the infamous profiteering engineered by commercial banks and international companies? The latest example of the brainlessness (or is it bad faith) of our monetary officials came last week, when the bottom nearly dropped out of the pound we are now told that this occurred because large oil com-panies "unloaded" huge amounts of sterling after Saudi Arabla amounced that it no longer wants to be paid for oil in that currency. A run on a currency such as happened to the pound is caused by banks and companies. Why then are they not controlled by central banks? Why is that when they buy large amounts of any currency they are not required to register the purchase with the authorities? And then be required to resell the money small amounts only, so as not to disturb the currency exchanges?

And finally, wouldn't the very fastest way to stop currency

upheavals and profiteering be to require that they reself large holdings at the same price at which they bought them?

Growing out of World War I experiences, the treaty already has been ratified by 103 other countries, including most of the world's major military and industrial powers.

"It is true that some couples were seen folded in each other's arms and kissing. But it is also true that some 5,000 youths, staying three hours in the dark stretched out on the floor could have caused more serious damage and behaved in a more disgraceful way."

Kissinger Is Said to 'Consume' News Officials at State Dept.

By Murrey Marder

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17 (WP). -Secretary of State Henry Kissinger has "consumed another press officer," in the language of State Department insiders.

The department confirmed the impending transfer of John King. 45, director of the Office of Press Relations since Mr. Kissinger became secretary in September, 1973. Mr. King's involunta y shift from the news office to the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs is not, however, part of a "purge" of the office, officials said. The departure of two other associates from the office, Paul Hare and Irwin Pernick was described by a source as "a racing for the exits-long planned."

Mr. Kissinger is noted for his reluctance to permit subordinates to speak in his behalf, "He's got this obsession," an aide said, "that nobody can say anything about anything except him."

A problem for the State De-partment is that Mr. Kissinger's constant travel frequently leaves the department tongue-tied in discussing essentials of foreign policy apart from what Mr. Kissinger is saying abroad.

Question Time

The department is left with equally unsatisfactory choices: It can attempt to follow the detailed instructions Mr. Kissinger often cables about what it should say, but then the questions do not always fit the answers he supplies; or it can stand mute before the unanticipated questions; or the spokesman can say he cannot answer until the secretary returns. The result often makes the department look foolish. "I don't think it's fair to lay all the blame on him," a Kissinger loyalist reported, "even acknowledging he is a difficult man to work for. Maybe we don't have the right men in the job... It read him' and to understand him." Questions about the depart-

Stassinopoulos Is Proposed as Greek President

ATHENS, Dec. 17 (UPI).-Premicr Constantine Caramanlis today proposed Michael Stassinopoulos, a former president of the Council of State, as provisional president of the republic.

Mr. Stassinopoulos, 71. was elected a member of parilament at large Nov. 17 in the first parliamentary elections after the restoration of democracy.

Mr. Caramaniis agreed with opposition leaders George Mayros and Andreas Papandreou that voting for the provisional president would take place tomorrow. Mr. Stassinopoulos was fired from the presidency of the Council of State, which is the constitutional court, in June, 1969, when he refused to condone the dis-missal of senior judges by dictator

George Papadopoulos. As the candidate of Mr. Cara-Mr. Stassinopoulos is virtually certain to be approved. The party controls 220 of the 300 parliamen-

London Confirms U.S. Chooses Richardson

LONDON, Dec. 17 (AP).-The Foreign Office confirmed yester-day that the Ford administration has decided to nominate Elliot Richardson to be the next U.S. ambaseador to Britain. Diplomatic sources said that London is almost certain to anprove but that a formal announcement will come from Washington,

Mr. Richardson, 54, resigned as attorney general rather than follow the order of former President Richard Nixon to fire Archibald Cox as the first Watergate special prosecutor. Farly in the Nixon administration, he served in the State Department. The ambassadorship has been vacant since Walter Annenberg retired in October.

Dominating Jeanne Moreau

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss DARIS, Dec. 17 (IHT), Jeanne best actresses, is seen too seldom on the screen these days. She was in "Les Valseuses," but briefly, lending impact to what was essentially a cameo role. She returns now as a leading lady in "Jeanne La Française," a Brazilian film that is among the holiday season's coming attractions. Once again her presence and talent distinguish a motion picture which, though curious and novel in setting, struggles vainly to liberate itself from melodrama.

Carlos Diegues, the directorauthor, presents us with a bloodand-thunder saga crowded with murder and sudden death. Three characters are dispatched by bullets and three succumb to heart attacks. His limited imagination imposes monotony on the proceedings.

Jeanne La Française is a Parizian, long a resident of Sáo Paulo. The time is 1930 and there is political unrest in Brazil. She is the mistress of a wealthy Brazilian who owns sugarcane fields in the interior. When his wife dies, Jeanne takes up permanent residence in his country mansion. His estate is overrun with his

> Despite a rambling and ineffectual narrative-it always seems to be on the verge of compelling drama - Diegues presents the background intriguingly: the railroad journey into the tropic wilds, the land bordering the jungle, the tiled manor house, the sugarcane country, the arid village. Jeanne Morean dominates with a strong characterization of the enigmatic femme fatale. Carlos Kroeber, looking rather like Theodore Roosevelt, scores as the plantation owner taken to the bottle, and Pierre Cardin makes brief, polite appearances as the French consul a suitor at the court of the exiled Circe. There is an effective musical score and Miss Moreau sings a song or two. "Jeanne La Française" (in Portuguese with French subtitles) is due on Paris screens

One Sign of Good Health

MUSIC IN PARIS

By David Stevens

PARIS, Dec. 17 (IHT).-One of the healthlest signs of current French musical life was displayed last night at the Théâtre des Champs-Hiysées with a single Paris performance of Daniel Lesur's opera "Andrea del Sarto" by the company of the Theatre des Arts of Roven

For one thing, an appearance in Paris by one of France's municipal companies is an almost unheard-of event, although the French railway system should subsidize the Rouen opera in recognition of the brisk business it has done for years carrying informed Parisian opera erthusiasts to and from the Norman city for certain Sunday matiness. Even with the revividication of the Paris Opera. this visit from the provinces is by no means a case of carrying coals to Newcastle. The same can be said of the visits earlier this year of the Strasbourg and Lyons orchestres.

Many Years

Secondly, "Andrea del Sarto" is arguably the best French opera written in a good many years. It had its premiere in 1989 in Mar-sellles, and Rouen opened its current season with this new production, which has been or will be seen in several other French cities. So why not Paris?

The 66-year-old composer is perhaps better known as a member of French musical officialdomhe was interim administrator of the Paris Opéra before the Liebermann administration and he is an inspecteur oénéral of music in the Cultural Ministry—than for his compositions. In the 1930s, he was a member of the Jeune France group (with Messiaen, Jolivet and Yves Baudrier), whose unifying characteristics were a certain neo-romanticism and re-cial bore might have been feared. But, although this is an opera written in the long shadows of Debussy and 19th-century romanticism its musical voice is decidedly individual and of this cen-

The work had a long growth. Lesur first wrote stage music for a production of Musset's play about the 16th-century Florentine painter, then a symphonic poem on the same subject, before tackling the libretto himself and developing it into a full-fledged

This history is suggested in the final result. The text is carefully projected in a quasi-Debussian musical speech that hovers between arioso and recitative, although it does not exclude ensembles and choral scenes on the romantic model. At the same time, the orchestra-vidid, brassy and motivic supplies both atmosphere and dramatic tension in accompaniment and in interludes.

The work is not without its cliches. The artist tormented in his art and his life is a favorite theme and it is outfitted here with murder, love triangle, duel and suicide, sometimes pushing the composer close to the edge of operatic parody. There are musical references, too, ranging from pastiche period dance music to a somewhat long-winded Mussorgskian death scene for Andrea -splendidly carried off by Gabrief Bacquier-and one orchestral outburst evocative of Berg's invention on one note in the final act of "Wozzeck." But ultimately almost all is effectively absorbed into the composer's own language.

Renaissance Italy The subject also gives the stage director and designer room to expand in the atmosphere of Rejection of Central European ten-dencies of the time.

In the circumstances, an offiventures into the same historica period, and his stylized and mo, bile sets were both effective and atmospheric—with sepia-toner Armo and transparent pillars that gave an airy feeling to the stage : space. His final scene is a shift : in atmosphere, claustrophobic and dominated by the rich colon of imitations of the artist's car canvases, Margherita Walimanni staging was effective in a conventional way that did not alway: seize the opportunities present by the composer's imagination,

> The cast, many of whom were in the Marseilles premiere, wat dominated by Bacquier as the title character, disastrously tom between his desire to prolong his artistic ideals through the talent of his favorite pupil, and the effect of his wife's love affair with said pupil—stalwartly sungand rather stiffly acted by Andree Esposito and André Turp. Danièle Perriers, Gérard Chapuis and, Gérard Serkoyan gave solid per l'Ill's formances in lesser parts, and the Rouen orchestra and en semble were conducted with vigar Paul Ethuin.

This venture gives rise to articles, prompted by the imminent expulsion of the Opera Studio from the former Opera Comiqui premises, Supposedly the Comigni premises, Supposedly the Comique is to be reopened, heaven know for what, since its erstwhile repertory has been thoroughly looted to provide the Opera with the bulk of its present repertory: The provincial theaters have a number of lively and interesting operatic productions, many o them produced on an exchange basis between various Frenci cities. Could they not also trave : to Paris and keep things going at the venerable Salle Favart?

A Good-Humored Guide to Dining Out in Moscow

By Theodore Shabad

NEW YORK (NYT).—The notion of a Moscow restaurant guide is likely to evoke smiles of derision among visitors and forsign residents of the Soviet capital Many of them count dining out, from the plea for admittance at the door to the excruciatingly slow serving of mediocre food in high-ceilinged, marble-columned premises, among the less pleasurable experiences of their stay.

Yet two young Columbia University scholars acting in blithe ignorance of the conventional wisdom, have now produced what very well may be the only guide to Moscow's restaurants ever published. And they have done it in such a good-humored fashion that the reader is tempted to pack the attractive little book and do battle once again with adamant doormen for a taste of that borscht and the sound of that blaring dance band.

Wesley Fisher, a sociologist, and wesely Fisher, a Sociologist, and his wife, Lynn, a Russian litera-ture specialist, have som what op-timistically titled their guide, not only lists virtually all the public eating establishments of any interest, but rates food, ambience and service of most of them on a four-point scale—ranging from poor to excellent-on the basis of personal visits and evaluations,

The Fishers did most of their field work in 1970-71, when they were in Moscow on an academic exchange program, and have returned for visits since then,

In their survey of the approximately 250 restaurants and cafés, the Fishers have of course included all the luxury establishments that cater to foreign tourists.

They include such top-rated eating places as the National Hotel and the 21st floor of the Rossiva Hotel with its stunning panoramic view of the Kremlin. taurants as the Aragvi, which serves Georgian food, and the Uzbekistan, with its Central Asian flavor.

But the charm of "The Moscow

In Washington, a Treasury official said the Ford administration does not plan to ask Con-gress immediately to abolish the official price of gold, but he suggested that such a step may be taken next year.

Under Secretary Jack Bennett said any change in the worth of the U.S. gold stockpile would require congressional approval. "There is no intention at present to propose that," he said, But, he said, such a step might be "appropriate" next year when the administration expects to submit to Congress a set of proposed amendments to the articles of the International Monetary Fund. "I would be inclined to recom-mend that we abolish the official price of gold at that time," Mr.

Bennett said.
Investors' antibipation that a floor price would evolve drove bids up today, analysts said. because the free price has been higher than the pegged price

The dollar was plagued by the inverse relationship to gold: as the value of the metal rises, the dollar falls Other factors were also at work U.S. interest rates are falling rather sharply and are now below many European rates and this is prompting investors seeking to maximus the return on their cash to move out of the dollar, In addition, normal year-end bookkeeping by companies to dress up their cash balances is creating pressures both in the foreign exchange as well as the Eurocurrency markets.

Adding further confusion is the bear squeeze that the Bank of England is apparently waging. It has driven rates for Eurosterling up to more than 30 per cent (on an annual basis) for seven-day funds in an effort to force speculators who have sold sterling short cover their positions, In effect, the bank is trying to reverse the downward pressure on sterling. Today, the pound was worth $2,33445, up from the low of $2,30925 last week when Saudi Arabia was falsely rumored to be and not just for oil payments.

EEC to Trim Fuel Imports

The only politically delicate issue that was discussed coday was Britain's oil finds in the North Sea. There have been fears in Britain that EEC membership would mean that the rest of the community members might have an equal claim to the strikes. But British Energy Secretary Eric Varley said at a news conference that the EEC "represents no threat at all to North Sea oil -provided it is understood that London must have complete control over the depletion rate of se resources." He said there had been no challenge to this statement by any of the other community countries.

Japan Cuts by 3% TOKYO, Dec. 17 (WP).-Japan announced plans today for re-ducing its petroleum consump-tion by about 3 per cent next year to cooperate with international energy-saving efforts.

Announcing the cutback target for the first time after a cabinet meeting, Minister of International Trade Toshio Komoto did not explicitly say it is in response to U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's demand for petroleum reductions by major consuming nations. But it is understood that this is so. Mr. Komoto sald Japan's planned cutback will be generally in line with a projected U.S. saving of about 600,000 barrels a day of petroleum, which he estimated to be slightly more than 3.5 per cent of daily U.S. consumption. Mr. Klasinger initially asked for 10-per-cent reduction by the oll-consuming na-

Officials of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry said the scheduled cutback in oil importation (as opposed to con-sumption) could be close to 4 per cent if present tentative plans are approved. They said Japan will import about 4.87 miltion barrels a day this year, com-pared with a projected 1975 fig-ure of 4.68 million barrels a day.

Ford of Britain Raises Prices

Ford Motor Co. of Britain is raising its prices for cars, trucks and tractors an average 9 per cent. It is the fourth price rise this year and follows the company's recent decision to cut salaried white-collar staff by 11 per cent through voluntary retirements. Ford attributes the latest increase to rapidly mounting costs for steel, rubber, plastics and other raw materials. British Leyland, Britain's largest car maker, announced 7.5-per-cent price rises last week.

Costs Cut Daimler Profit

Daimler-Benz's 1974 operating profit has been onsiderably affected by an increase of around 1.4 billion marks in material and personnel costs, only half of which has been recouped in sales prices, board chairman Joachim Zahn says. Mr. Zahn told journalists it is too early to forecast 1974 results. Write-offs and changes in stock values will certainly indicate significant paper profits and net interest earnings will again make an important real contribution. Group 1974 turnover should reach about 16.5 billion marks. Production in 1975 is expected to be around 1974 levels and Daimler-Benz also ex pects to continue to avoid short-time working in the car sector in the particularly difficult months of January and February.

U.S. Aerospace Sales Seen Rising

Sales of U.S. aircraft, missiles, and other aerospace products will rise 6.8 per cent to a near-record $28.9 billion next year, but inflation is expected to account for more than the entire gain. The Aerospace Industries Association says that, adjusted for inflation, the industry's sales volume would actually decline a bit, by about 2.1 per cent. But in a recessionary economy and in an industry whose revenue had tumbled sharply in constant dollar terms since 1968, the forecast was a positive one. It called for employment to drop only about 0.9 per cent, to 959,000.

Blaming Lack of Government Energy Program

U.S. Oil Firms Cancel Refinery Expansion

By John F. Lawrence WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—U.S. efforts to hold down energy con-sumption may seem soft to date, but they are having a very hard effect on oil industry plans for new refineries. Company after company is canceling or postponing indefinitely refinery expansion plans. The cutback has been so pronounced that any return to normal growth in fuel use would come at the expense of massive dependence on foreign refineries, at least for a

The cutbacks also may head off what might have been a surplus in petroleum products that could have driven down prices consumers pay. "The only way you are going to get prices to come down is when you have a surplus of supply," says a spokes-man for the American Petroleum

Oil companies generally blame their reluctance to go ahead with new facilities on the government and its failure to settle on a clear energy program. Industry leaders also complain of continued controls on refinery prices and profits. Consumption Drops

By far the most important factor, however, is the dramatically altered projections of how much fuel the nation is going to need. Since the Arab embargo ended last spring, consumption of oil products has continued to run some 3 per cent below a year ago. That is a sharp change from the steady growth of prior years, Without some government-imposed restraints on consumption, most industry leaders expect oil use to resume some growth before long. But they are not even close to a firm forecast on how much growth or how much government restriction to expect. Just 18 months ago, major oil companies were warning of a huge shortage in U.S. refining capacity if expansion did not begin immedistely and if environmental considerations were allowed to slow site selection for the new re-

Then came the embargo, and as it stretched on through last winter a survey by the Los Angeles Times found that the oil companies were concerned enough about crude supplies and demand projections to kill or delay 40 per cent of that expansion.

In recent weeks, a number of other projects have been cancelled, earlier delays have stretched on into apparent cancellations and now less than half of the originalscheduled expansion is left in the works.

Despite that turnsbout, oil

Fed Enters Money Market, Injects Funds Into System

By Vartanig G. Vartan

NEW YORK, Dec. 17 (NYT) -The Federal Reserve apparently confirmed yesterday that it had chosen a lower trading range for federal funds, a key indicator of monetary policy, in its current move toward easing credit.

The Fed stepped into the money market to inject temporary reserves into the banking system when federal funds (overnight loans between banks) were trading at 8 3/4 per cent. This action indicates that the currently acceptable range for this critical short-term rate is now 8 1/4 to 8 3/4 per cent, compared with a band of 8 1/2 to 9 per cent only last week.

Three months ago federal funds traded in a band of 11 1/2 to 12 per cent. As the rate for federal funds tumbled, other short-term rates such as certificates of deposit, commercial paper and the prime rate soon followed down-

Specifically, the Fed injected reserves yesterday by negotiating three-day repurchase agreements The Fed's monthly Open Market Committee meeting, which sets broad parameters for monetary policy, takes place today, But in a sense, the swift con-fluence of recent events already has indicated that the Fed is worried increasingly about the

Ford Reacts To U.S. Steel Price Boost

Calls on Company To Justify Its Move

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17 (AP-DJ).—The White House said to-day President Ford is asking U.S. Steel Corp. to justify yesterday's price increase in writing. Mr. Ford is "concerned and very disappointed" by the U.S. Steel announcement and his request for "justification" is being relayed by the Council on Wage and Price Stability.

Spokesman Ron Nessen said the council "could" call hearings on the price increase to mobilize put'ic opinion if the U.S. Steel response is unsatisfactory. Mr. Nesren said he knew of no plans at the moment by the President to attempt to roll back the price

Mr. Nessen said he had "the feeling that the book isn't closed

The White House got very little, if any, advance notice on the U.S. Steel announcement, Mr. Nessen said. He noted that the Council on Wage and Price Stability has not set a specific deadline for U.S. Steel justification but "it was made clear to U.S. Steel that the White House wants justification immediately."

U.S. Steel Corp., the nation's largest steel producer, announced yesterday sweeping price increases averaging about 8 per cent over two-thirds of its product line. The increases will primarily affect the construction, rail and oil industries.

Most of the increases become effective tomorrow, although an increase in tin plate-used in tin cans-will not become effective until Jan 13.

U.S. Steel has raised prices on most products about 20 per cent this year, most of which came soon after federal price controls were lifted April 30. Under the new price increases, carbon steel plate, used among other things for the construction of tanks and oil pipeline, rose $20 a ton as did standard T-rails for Special quality tubular bars rose $10 a ton and carbon steel rods $5 a ton. Tin prices jumped an average of 8 per cent.

Energy Secretary Eric Varley said in a written parliamentary statement today that the oil companies needed increased prices because of the higher price for crude oil charged by the producing countries.

Dow Average Gains 11 As N.Y. Stocks Rally

Bearing up well against the tor-rent of mostly negative economic news. New York Stock Exchange prices struggled to close with a modest gain today.

Although gainers narrowly edg-ed out losers by about 700 to 660 the Dow Jones industrial average made a sharp gain of 10.71 to 597.54 as such issues as Procter & Gamble, Exxon, Du Pont and Eastman Kodak registered big gains. The rise in the average reversed two straight sessions of losses. At 3 o'clock it was up

Volume rose to 16.88 million shares from 15.37 million shares

Stocks started out lower, turned mixed in the early session and trendless until mid-afternoon. As prices began to firm, the upswing gained momentum and the average rose steadily near the close.

Housing Starts And Permits Fall In U.S. in Month

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17 (Reuters).—Privately-owned housing starts plunged to an eight-year low in November-falling 116,000 units to a seasonally-adjusted annual rate of 990,000 units, the Commerce Department reported today.

Building permits fell 52,000 units to a seasonally-adjusted annual rate of 720,000 units, the lowest level since the Commerce Department began keeping such figures in 1960.

The November housing starts figure compared with a downward revised rate of 1,106,000 units in October and a rate of 1,675,000 units in November, 1973. It was the fourth consecutive monthly decline in housing starts.

Almost the entire drop in housing starts was concentrated in starts of five or more-family homes which fell 114,000 units to a seasonally-adjusted annual rate of 161,000 units. Starts of two to four-family homes fell 7,000 units to a seasonally-adjusted annual rate of 45,000 units.

Despite the overall decline, starts of one-family homes actually increased by 5,000 units to a seasonally-adjusted annual rate of 784,000 units.

Gold stocks soared, reflecting sharply higher bullion prices and a sinking dollar abroad. ASA surged 5 5/8 to 76 7/8, Dome Mines 3 5/8 to 50 3/8, Homestake Mining 1 5/8 to 44 5/8 and Campbell Red Lake 1 3/4 to 34 3/4. Speculation that silver would also draw investor interest helped lift most silver stocks. Hecla Mining climbed 1 1/8 to 16 1/8, Sunshine Mining 7/8 to 10, Callahan Mining 1/8 to 8 1/8, Rosario Resources 1 to 31 1/2 and Day Mines 1/8 to 6 7/8.

Active issues included Hercules, which lost 1 to 24 7/8. A 300,000share block at 25 accounted for most of the turnover. Southern dipped 1/4 to 8 1/4. A 178,300share block traded at 8 1/4.

Eurco Is Worth... Eurocurrency

As a whole Western Europe is a place with limitless business possibilities.

But it's also a number of very different countries which tend to complicate things a bit.

Imagine having to deal separately with an Austrian bank, a Belgian bank, a Dutch bank, a French bank, a German bank and an Italian bank to name but a few possibilities.

That won't be easy. But it won't be necessary if your business is with Midland Bank, a great British bank.

We can take care of the financial side of your business for the whole of Europe.

We have correspondent relationships with over 1.000 banks in Western Europe alone.

We're participants in a European banking group which will give you access to full service banking facilities at almost 9,000 branches.

And in Britain, with over 3,200 branches we're as powerful a bank group as you getting something started here even if it's only a financial headquarters. To help you in that direction we'd like to

All of which makes a strong case for send you a 32 page brochure that in general terms tells you all you need to know about setting up in Britain.

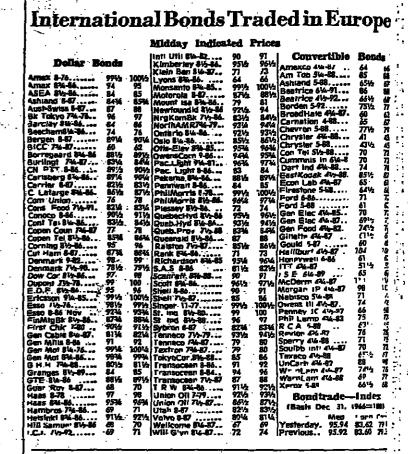

To get your copy write to: Mr. F. O. Dunphy, Midland Bank, Room 50, 60 Gracechurch St., London EC3P 3BN. England.

If you bank with the Midland, you're in business in Europe.

LIONS AND FOXES:

Men and Ideas of the Italian Renaissance

By Sidney Alexander. Illustrated. Macmillan. 375 pp. $12.95.

Reviewed by Herbert Mitgang are all creatures of the Renaissance. Etymologically, all Americans are Fiorentines." This is a warm thought while crossing the East River on the subway instead of the Arno River on foot over the Ponte Vecchio. Now, the news that may not be as good: "More fundamentally, we are all creatures of the Renaissanc: mentality." That takes some thinking over: Can we Medicis stand you Borgias?

In "Lions and Foxes," Sidney Alexander unashamedly keeps drawing parallels between countries and centuries. He leaps time gracefully and allows the reader to walk with him through the quattrocento and cinquecento, stopping now and then to admire a masterpiece and read a poem or study a scoundrel with class. Most of the giants are encountered here in minibiogra-phies: Michelangelo, kneeling before art and talking back to popes; Leonardo Da Vinci, the one-man thinking machine who managed without a computer, the air shuttle to Washington or the Harvard Business Review; Lorenzo Il Magnifico, statesman, political boss and lover; Savona-rola, the religious dictator of morals and art; Machiavelli, the systems analyst of princely input; Galileo, muttering against the Inquisition in three famous words for Earth men, "Eppure si muove" ("It moves nevertheless").

A great deal has been written about Machiavelli in recent years because some princes and presidents have fallen on hard times.

The Machiavelli contradiction appears in the title and epigraph of Mr. Alexander's book: "A prince being thus obliged to know well how to act as a beast must imitate the fox and the lion, for the lion cannot protect himself from traps, and the fox cannot defend himself from wolves. One must therefore be a fox to recognize traps, and a lion to frighten wolves. Those that wish to be only lions do not understand this." Renaissance revisionists (the author is not one; he is more of an aesthetic scholar) nowadays take the view that Machiavelli was not Machiavellian that rather he was an idealist who was a cynic, an available intellectual as Max Ascoli once characterized him. The great pleasure of reading "Lions and Foxes" is found in the author's numerous literary and artistic ci-tations, of which there are new allusions in the chapter on Machiavelli.

"There is no Machiavellian state although all states employ Machiavellianism," Mr. Alexander inserves "Machisvelli helieved that there were laws of human behavior, laws on how to become a prince, laws on how to found state, laws of what we have come to call political science, Curiously enough, such an effort to find laws is always most char-acteristic of lawless societies.

FURST, the good news: "We South American republics contribute the greatest number of authorities on international law; that most law-abiding of all societies. Great Britain, has no written constitution."

The author, an American who has lived in Florence for many years, is particularly interesting in his studies of the masters found in the museums on both sides of the Arno. He sees a new phase in Bottirelli's painting after the martyrdom of the reformist monk Savonarola: light-ning-struck figures and fre ried angels swirling. He finds that some of the sweetest madonnas of Raphael were painted during fratricidal warfare in the strects of Perugia. But he disputes the notion that art requires rebellion or alienation. And always with an eye on the 20th century, he offers the comparison of working for the Medicis and popes and painting for the Works Progress Administration during the New Deal, neither selling out by the artist nor guaranteeing great art.

The author is willing to tread dangerous ground, theorizing that when man feels himself a victim or prey to hostile powers, his art tends to be abstract and magical; when man feels himself a con-queror of his world, his art tends toward the aggrandizement of the human condition. His theory serves to celebrate the Renaissance artists and diminish today's, but it doesn't always prove out. "Is it surprising that sculp-tors punch holes in their masses (Henry Moore) or make mobiles (Alexander Calder)?" he asks. But Moore, for one, is carving now near the same quarries in Italy where Michelangelo worked, and surely celebrating the human family and condition; Calder manages to separate his political protest from his soaring art

"Lions and Foxes" is a chal-lenge and a walkthrough, his-torically and artistically. It will heighten awareness for museum-goers. And it makes a reader wonder when the next Renaissance men will appear here. @ The New York Times.

"On the diagramed deal, most dubious prospect, especially in pairs reached six hearts, but a few aggressive partnerships reached for the grand slam, which has fair chances if the trumps split three-two. In the diagramed auction,

South chose a strange preemptive opening of four nearts and North launched into Blackwood. When he discovered that his partner held an ace and two tings, the grand slam looked-like a good bet. He assumed that South held seven hearts headed by the ace-king, in which case the declarer would be able to take seven trump tricks one diamond ruff and five tricks in the side suits. Alternatively, the spade suit might be establishable. West made a somewhat daring opening lead of the diamond four, hoping to force South to an immediate decision if the dummy held ace-queen of dismonds. When South spent a long time staring at the dummy, North realized that the play would not be quite as easy as he had expected. South owed his partner a trump, but against that the spade queen was worth a trick. If he had known the lie of the cards, he would have ruffed out the diamond king to make the grand slam, but that seemed a view of the opening lead. South had a better chance, but it did not work out. He tried for P. ruff, and six top tricks in the side-suits. All went well up to a point. He cashed the spade queen and the club king and en-tered dummy with a diamond ruff. He then cashed the club ace and tried for two more spade tricks. Unfortunately, West Wa able to ruff, for one down.

Tennessee Triumphs In Liberty Bowl Game

By Paul Attner

MEMPHIS, Dec. 17 (WP).—Quarterback Randy Wallace passed ya ds to Larry Seivers with 2:28 left in the game last night to re Tennezsee a 7-3 victory over Maryland in the Liberty Bowl. The touchdown was set up when Terrapin center Marion Coprowski snapped high to punter Phil Wagenheim on a fourth-Jown play from the Maryland 21. Wagenheim could not handle the snap and had t cover the ball on his own seven, where Tennesses look over. On third down, Wallace, who had come in for starter Condredge Holloway, hit Selvers in the end zone past Maryland defender Pat Ulam.

Maryland took the ensuing kickoff and moved to the Tennessee 3 behind the passing of Bob Avellini. On third down, a pass to right end Walter White hit the receiver's hands, bounced up and was picked off by Tennessee's Ernic Ward.

A 28-yard field goal by Steve Mike-Mayer gave Maryland a 3-0 halftime lead. The kick was set up by a 63-yard punt return by 3obby Smith, who fielded a fine Neil Clabo on his own 17, cut to the right and scooted down the sideline. He was stopped on the Tennezsee with 53 seconds left in the first quarter.

Maryland lost six yards on the first two downs, then Bob Avellini hit tight end Walter White for 15 yards. Maryland coach Jerry Clatborn elected to try for the field goal on the second play of the econd period and Mike-Mayer was true with 14:32 left in the quarter. Otherwise, the period was highlighted by two Mary and mistake:

The Packers finished with a 6-8 won-lost record this year. Bart Starr, the former Green Bay quarterback, is believed to be the leading candidate to succeed Devine, who had a year to go on a fiveyear contract. It was considered unlikely that

Devine would have had a chance to finish his contract without being asked to resign by Dominic Olejniczak, the club president who heads an unusual management structure. Imagine Anyone Trying to Teach Italians to Race

raises hand of Frenchman Léonard Tavarez after

Buchanan won to retain European lightweight title.

By William Tuohy VALLELUNGA, Italy, Dec. 17.

—Italy is a country that prides itself on the dash of its drivers. Itslians believe that driving demands a certain Latin quality for true brilliance. Yet the country's foremost racing drivers' school is run by a mild-mannered and patient Irishman named Henry Morrogh who, in the last six years, has trained 1,000 Italians to race formula cars. Each weekend at this racecourse just north of Rome, Morregh's pupils gather to practice, and the countryside echoes with the roar of engines and the screech of tires as the cars round Vallelungs's tight corners.

What is a 43-year-old Irishman doing teaching Italians how to drive fast?

"Actually, I think Italians are the greatest natural drivers," Morrogh says. They have extremely good reflexes and are sensitive to care and to roads.

But they don't like to take advice from one another, so it is probably easier to take instructions from a foreigner like my-self, if he has the credentials."

Morrogh began racing motor-cycles in 1951, setting records in hill climbing. He switched to cars and won his category at Le Mans and Reims in France.
Meanwhile, he began teaching at various racetracks in Europe and in 1865, devoted himself fulltime to instructing first in the United States, and then in Italy.

Something to Learn "The trouble with teaching Italians driving," Morrogh says, "is that it takes them a while to accept the fact that they have something to learn. They go out on the track to show how they are, so you have to let them do it the wrong way first.

But even after they become proficient racing drivers, they still have the destructive problem of bella figura-or their good image. In no other country is a driver expected to win his first race. But the Italian scens to think he must win his first time out, and this has been responsible for the death of many Italian Morrogh suggests this is one reason why no Ytalian racing driver has been among the top grand prix contenders in recent years. Another is the inability of Italian drivers to get the big companies to sponsor racing teams, Companies like Perrari, he says, have shied away from employing Italian drivers because driver is killed or injured. lesson course, with each lesson based on 10 circuits of the onemile Vallelunga track.

The course begins with Morrogh packing the new students into an old Peugeot station wagon and driving around the recetrack, pointing out the best line to take through the curves, and indicating the various preference points at which to brake, downshift and shift up again.

Then he explains how to brake before the curve, how to drift through it, and how the nose of the car should be headed toward the exit for a fast getaway out of the corner. Learning the Art of press criticism when an Italian dual controls, learning the art of driver is killed or injured.

Students then move to a twoseater De Sanctis prototype with

Morrogh offers beginners a 15-

Two or three lessons later, the students start on one-seater formula Fords or formula Italias, first getting used to the racing cars, and then building up speeds and practicing the four-wheeldrift through corners.

Morrogh and his assistants linked by walkie-talkie, are strategically placed on the course, watching the students go through the turns.

Morrogh jots down his findings on a chart: "This boy's coming into the turn too fast ... That one's too slow coming out ... This fellow's in the wrong gear The other boy is letting the engine rev up too high-he could blow the engine . . .

Occasionally, Morrogh flags down a driver to correct some flaw in cornering technique, "Going into a corner right and coming out fast is the name of the game," says Morrogh, who also teaches students to get out "A racing car one moment feels like the most secure vehicle on earth. But the next moment, the car can break away. Every driver loses control sooner or later, but here at the hairpin turn, where the cars aren't going too fast, we line, driving just short of the limit of tire adhesion," Morrogh "The most common fault of inexperienced drivers is to brake too late before a corner, thereby going into it too fast, and con ing out too slow and not headed properly down-track," teach them what to do about it and how to maintain the right

Morrogh's methods appear to be successful: his students have won dozens of championships and his current star, Stefano Nisini, has won this year's Italian national championship for formula

Morrogh's students are varied. Gianpiero Galli, for instance, is a 19-year-old student who says: "I'd like to become a racing driver, but through these lessons, I can see what it is like, and also find out whether I'm good enough to so into racing full time " Tino Cardia drives a big tanker for an oil company and says:

"Twe been driving that rig for 18 years and it's not much fun.

But learning to race makes driv-ing fun again, and on the weekends here, I really feel liberated. Mario Ubaldini is a 56-year-old publisher who owns a Ferrari and his own formula Ford "You just can't drive fast on ordinary roads any longer. So after a week cooped up in an office, I like to come out here to race. It's a more demanding form of driving." According to Morrogh, amateur racing in Italy is not dangerous, with only one fatality in the last few years.

Morrogh is also thinking of opening a school for advanced drivers in ordinary production "We have these schools in England but none in Italy, and only a few in the United States. I think it is essential that drivers should, for instance, have experience sliding on a skid pan. "If you are going to drive a car at high speed, you might as well learn to drive it really well. It could save your life," he says.

Luciano's Last Testament —Another Book Scandal?

By Nicholas Gage

NEW YORK Dec. 17 (NYT).—Although "The Last Testament of Lucky Luciano" has not yet been published by Little, Brown & Co., the 461-page book has already earned more than $1 million.

The paperback rights alone have been sold for $800,000, a serialization recently appeared in Penthouse magazine and the $10 book has been chosen as main selection by both the Bookof-the-Month Club and the Playboy Book Club. Publication is scheduled for January.

The book's success is based largely on the publisher's claim that it is the life story of Lucky Luciano as dictated by the Mafin boss himself before his death in 1962. The book's jacket copy begins, "Dictated by Charles Lucky' Luciano during the final months of his life to film producer Martin A. Gosch, this powerful inside chronicle is literally the 'last testament' of America's most notorious gangster." Gosch died in 1973.

But an examination of the book, including research into papers and documents concerning Luciano and more than 20 interviews, has produced information that questions that claim.

In one case, for instance, Luciano's opinion is quoted about an event that happened two years after he died. Other

• No tapes exist of the Maria leader's discussing his underworld career, although the book has been advertised as based on taped conversations. Nor is there any signed statement by him verifying that he supplied the information for the book. · Most of the book's information on the Mafia has already appeared in previous books, and errors in them are repeated in "The Last Testament of Lucky Luciano," according to organized crime specialists Peter Maas and Hank Messick.

• The book quotes Luciano as saying that he participated in meetings and events that would have been impossible for him to attend because he was in jail at the time.

Richard Hammer, who collaborated with Gosch on the book, says that while there are some inaccuracies in it, the work is what it purports to be—the life story of Lucky Luciano

"The Last Testament of Lucky Luciano" is described in its introduction as the result of conversations between Lucky Luciano and Martin Gosch that took place over a 10-month period the year before the gangster's death.

Luciano, who emigrated from Sicily in 1906 when he was 9, rose quickly in Mafia ranks during the twenties. In 1931 he masterminded the murder of the Mafia "boss of bosses" and restructured the Mafia into a federation of "families." He was sentenced from 30 to 50 years in prison in 1936 for compulsory prostitution and released and deported to Italy 10 years later a reward for contributions to the war effort. The nature of those contributions is still unclear.

Luciano and Gosch came together to work on a fictionalized movie script about the Mafla boss, the introduction says, but the project eventually had to be canceled because Luciano's underworld associates vetoed it.

In retaliation Luciano decided to tell his life story to Gosch for a book, according to the introduction, with the provision that it would not be published until at least 10 years after the gangster's death.

In 1972 Gosch approached Hammer, a freelance writer, to help him write the book, which was completed about a year later, shortly before Gosch's death of a heart attack. Hammer formerly worked for The New York Times and was nominated for a National Book Award for "One Morning in the War," which dealt with the My Lai massacre. Hammer said that he did not like Gosch personally, but became convinced that the producer had genuine notes which were based on conversations with Luciano and decided to collaborate with him on the book.

Roger Donald, who edited the Luciano book at Little, Brown, said the company has two sworn affidavits and three signed letters from friends and relatives who were close to Luciano and knew he was telling his life story to Gosch.

Donald confirmed that some of the five were sharing in the book's royalties. "But just because a person receives money doesn't mean he's not telling the truth." Donald said.

Hammer said the five included Luciano's two sisters, his mer mistress, Adriana Rizzo, and his close friend, Rosario Vitaliti. The name of the fifth person was not disclosed.

Of these four, Vitaliti, now in his 70s and living in Brooklyn, was the only one who could be reached for comment. He said he was in Italy when Luciano was talking to Gosch and that "everything he (Gosch) says is true."

Asked if Luciano had specifically told him that he was recounting his life story to Gosch, Vitaliti said, "Positively

He said that he and Luciano's two sisters and two sistersin-law will share 5 per cent of the book's royalties and 5 per cent of any motion-picture sale.

Luciano's former lawyer, Moses Polakoff, read the 65-page section of the book describing events in which he was directly involved and said that "not 5 per cent of the accounts bears any resemblance to reality."

When other factual errors in the book were pointed out, both Hammer and Donald of Little, Brown said-that confused recollections are inevitable when a man looks back on his life in his old age as Luciano did.

However, Luciano is quoted as saying in 1961 that a casino in the Bahamas in which Meyer Lansky had an interest was doing booming business. In fact, the casino was not opened until Jan. 22, 1964, when Luciano had been dead two years. Asked about that Hammer said: "If Gosch made that bit up, I don't think there's much else that he did. I think the rest of the book hangs. It may be self-serving and it may be inaccurate in parts, but it's Luciano's story as he told it."

What Inflation Means To a 10-Year-Old Boy

"Inflation is when you go shopping with your mother and she won't buy you a gum ball anymore," author-economist Philip Gomperts observes in his recently published book. Gompertz "was 9 when he wrote the book," his mother Carol said, "but inflation has made him 10." Philip's book, "A Child's View of Inflation," was published privately by his father after several publishers turned it down. Rolf Gompertz, an NBC publicist in Los Angeles, says he thought of the 40-page illustrated book after his son's remark at the supermarket. Some of Philip's other observations:

• Inflation is when the Tooth Fairy leaves a dime instead of a ouarter. • Inflation is when you get

cream bar costs 21 cents Philip sold more than 60 copies of his book at a recent autograph party and has sent a copy to President Ford, Writing, he says. is all right "in my free time, but not as a job-it's too hard." As for being an economist—"No. I don't think I want to be an economist. I don't want to be that worned."

Two years ago, 18 of former President Richard Nixon's 35 classmates at Duke University Law School pledged contributions to a scholarship fund that was to bear his name. Despite Nixon's political and legal troubles since then, the Class of 1937 is honoring its commitments, according to university officials. Several interviewed recently said that they wouldn't contribute again, or wished that the name of the scholarship would be changed. Pledges have reached $30,600 and so far two scholarships have been awarded from the fund, established in 1972.
